After having visited abroad for ten months, Dr. and Mrs. James Judd have returned to their home in Honolulu.

A San Francisco View of Mrs. Smart. The second heiress-bridal of the month—Thelma Parker, whose wedding takes place in the Hawaiian Islands on July 26th, is as picturesque a figure in the world of society as is on Wednesday evening.

Jennie Crocker, whose marriage today will be chronicled in many parts of the world solely because she possesses great wealth and consequent social position.

Thelma Parker has spent much of her time in San Francisco, and had she made her formal debut next winter instead of marrying immediately upon becoming of age, her first season out would have been a brilliant one in the social annals of this city.

In physique, Thelma Parker resembles the Burlingame heiress, but she is as dark as Jennie Crocker is fair.

They are both bestowing themselves and their great fortunes upon men with comparatively little money, and both marriages are rated as love matches.

Beyond this there is little of similarity between the two young women who are the greatest heiresses in the West.

Thelma Parker has the larger income of the two, and her fortune is increasing with greater rapidity than Jennie Crocker's because of the difference in the nature of her investments.

The California girl became of age several years ago, and the transfer of her estate was a mere legal matter that concerned no one but her family, her guardian and her attorneys. Since then she has flitted back and forth from Burlingame to New York and Europe, and spent nearly all of her winters in San Francisco.

Her favorite charity has been the orphanage at San Mateo, and she has always been generous in donating her vocal and terpsichorean talents when vaudeville entertainments have been arranged in other charitable causes.

Across the footlights at these amateur performances, and through the columns of the press, the public in her home city have alone become familiar with the girl who today is claiming the interest of two continents.

Many people living in the little towns surrounding her estate at Burlingame have never seen her. When Thelma Parker came to New York last February she repaired to her plantation home at Waimea, crossing the Pacific from San Francisco for that purpose, and the occasion was made one of rejoicing, in which the people of all the surrounding villages joined.

When her fortune was placed in her hands she immediately drew up a deed of trust, in which one-fourth of her income was to be given annually to charity; a second fourth of it settled upon her mother, Mrs. Fred Knight, and the balance she reserved for the use of herself and her husband.

Her marriage on July 25th will take place in the same picturesque spot where her birthday festivities took place, and the feasting in which the villagers will participate will last for several days, so that the inhabitants of the whole countryside will feel an intimate interest in the happiness of the bride.

The elaborate wedding ceremony at Burlingame today will typify the Western idea of the exclusiveness belonging to aristocracy; the wedding in Hawaii will suggest something barbaric and mediaeval, perhaps. But the interesting point of the comparison hinges on the fact that both brides move in the same society set in San Francisco, and they practice the same society conventions.—S. F. Chronicle, July 16.

Miss Mary von Holt is entertaining at a pot supper at the Outrigger Club figure in the world of society as is on Wednesday evening.
